LUNCH WITH A BACTERIOLOGIST.

What a Lawyer Learned About Losing His Appetite Without Eating.

A lawyer who had just returned from a western city where he was interested in litigation affecting the local water-works system was telling his partners his experiences and remarked that he had made a firm resolution never to invite a bacteriologist or an analytical chemist to luncheon again.

"The thing happened very naturally," said the lawyer. "The chemist, who happens to be one of the leading experts in the west on water analysis and is also professor of chemistry in one of the leading colleges out there, was called by my clients to give expert evidence. We left the court room for luncheon at the same time one day, and of course I invited him to go with me.

"The chemist accepted and proved to be a delightful sort of person while we were waiting for luncheon to be served. He told me in his breezy western way about things that interested me, and I was certain were going to become firm friends, when the waiter began to bring on the food.

"We had both ordered oyster soup and I felt to it with vigor, because I had been talking most of the forenoon and had worked up an appetite. Without a word of warning, the expert chemist opened up.

"I never enjoyed oysters much since my friend Professor —, bacteriologist of the — medical college, told me the result of some typhoid tests he had been making with oysters," said the chemist. "I will spare you the awful truth about oysters, because you appear to be fond of them, but really I think they are very dangerous.

"Naturally I didn't relish those oysters as much as I expected to, and I sidetracked them as soon as possible for the next course. A perfectly harmless looking piece of roast beef came next, and immediately the chemist commented on how much tuberculosis there was existing in herds of cattle throughout the immediate vicinity, and said he had been reliably informed that the government inspection of meat was far from what it should be.

"My roast beef immediately took on a peculiar flavor that seemed very suspicious. I ate sparingly of it.

"So it went all down the bill of fare. Articles of food that had been favorites from my youth caused the chemist to turn up his nose, because he had expert knowledge of a most derogatory kind about them. I was fast getting the impression that I only thought I was hungry when I spotted the ice cream and congratulated myself that there at least was something I could partake of heartily and be assured that I was safe.

"I had no more than started on the ice cream when the chemist said: 'You wouldn't eat that ice cream if you knew what was in it.'

"I didn't want any more. I suddenly remarked that I had a lot of work to do on my afternoon summing up of the water works case, and grabbing my hat I fled, making a silent resolve that while expert chemical and bacteriological knowledge was very good in its place, I didn't care to have it served with my lunch."—New York Sun.

GREAT BRITAIN DISPLEASED.

Course of Japan in Manchuria is Hardly Approved.

Peking, April 28.—The British government, through its diplomatic and consular representatives in China, is making quiet investigation of the course of the increasing antagonism of the Chinese of the mainland to the Japanese. The British press in China has recently published a series of arguments to show the seriousness of what it terms Japan's abuse of the object of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, namely, the maintenance of the integrity of China and the Japanese policy of the mainland is condemned by the foremost British residents in the Far East. It is held here that Japan has violated the equal opportunity clause of the Anglo-Japanese alliance.

The rapidity with which Japan is carrying on war against Manchuria has made Great Britain anxious concerning all incidents that furnish a precedent to Japan such as the question of the control of the municipality of Harbin. It is believed here that China, as a result of friendly suggestions, will appeal to The Hague to decide the legal force of the interpretations of the secret protocols and agreements that Russia and Japan are imposing upon her.

He Got What He Needed.

"Nine years ago it looked as if my time had come," says Mr. C. Farthing of Mill Creek, Ind. Ter. "I was so run down that I hung on a very slender thread. I had one foot in the grave, but Electric Bitters put it back on the turf again, and I've been well ever since." Sold under guarantee at Red Cross Pharmacy.

The Literary Viewpoint.

I worship at a cultured shrine,
My love has literary views.
And only such regard is mine
As is left over from the Muse;
For oft my patience shall begin
And check my speech before I begin it,
Pleading her rudeness in excuse.
She's struck a thought with copy in it.

At times amid some sylvan scene,
Her gaze with favor on me glows;
Then suddenly will supersene
That strange and absent-minded pose
The symptoms I can diagnose
That mark the physiologic minute—
The rapid, scrupulous look that shows
She's struck a thought with copy in it.

Discomfiting it is to find
When I have called into her eyes
A light quite personal and kind,
That swiftly her attention dies—
I turn to see if I have strayed,
Some rival song of lark or linnet,
But at a glance I recognize
She's struck a thought with copy in it.

Prince, when you pleadingly propose
For her consent and wait to win it,
May her expression show to those
Who search my face for signs of sin,
She's struck a thought with copy in it.

Sophy.
Sophy's as cross as a couple of sticks,
Fresh as the earliest spring-timely flower,
Harsh in the head as a drayload of bricks,
Bitter and surly and grouchy and sour.

Sophy's as homely as ever was made,
Pied as to features and blin as to hair,
I had one foot in the grave, but Electric Bitters put it back on the turf again, and I've been well ever since." Sold under guarantee at Red Cross Pharmacy.

Sophy's two cheek-bones are frightfully high,
Sophy's complexion's the color of snow,
She has a nose slightly bulbous—oh, my!
Teeth too protruding and chin that recedes.

Sophy's tall figure is terribly thin—
That her most ardent admirers must own—
She is constructed too much like a pin,
Standing six feet and just weighing six stone.

Sophy's a love that I won on a bet—
What is my crime that I'm worshipped by such?
What would I give if I never had met!
What, if she didn't adore me so much!

THE SCRAP BOOK

A Bungler.

He was a twentieth century hustling builder, and under his auspices cottages and buildings seemed to spring up like mushrooms.

"Please, sir," said one of his foremen, rushing up to him one morning in a state of mental collapse, "one of the new houses has fallen down in the night."

"What?" he roared. "You mean to say that one of my well built, desirable residential houses has come to grief? Ah, I suppose you took the scaffolding down before you put on the wall paper."

"Yes, sir."

"Well, what can you expect, you rank outsider? Call yourself a foreman! Get off the works! You're sacked!"—London Globe.

Two Rights and a Wrong.

A Camden shoe man sold a pair of shoes recently to a woman and after she had left the store discovered that he had made the mistake of giving the customer two rights instead of a right and left, as is customary. Rushing after the woman, he offered to make the wrong right, but was curtly informed that the customer was satisfied, as she had a wooden leg on the left side anyhow and needed only rights. Now the dealer considers himself flummoxed, because for the price of one pair of shoes he has really supplied the customer with two pairs.—Kennebec Journal.

A Scotch Excuse.

A celebrated Scottish lawyer had to address the Caledonian equivalent of our supreme court. His "pleading" occupied an entire day. After seven hours of almost continuous oratory he went home and at supper was asked to conduct family worship. As he was exhausted his devotions were brief.

"I am ashamed of ye," said the old mother. "To think ye could talk for seven hours up at the court and dismiss your Maker in seven minutes."

"Aye, vera true," was the reply. "But ye maun mind that the Lord Jesus sae dull in the upk as these judge bodies."

A Good Memory.

"Excuse me, sir, but haven't we met before? Your face is strangely familiar."

"Yes, madam, our host introduced us to each other just before dinner."

"Ah, I was positive I had seen you somewhere! I never forget a face."—Exchange.

To the Knockers.

Why go knocking, knocking, knocking, all the time and everywhere?
Don't you know that men will doubt you if your words are never fair?
Why insist that Smith has never done a thing to merit praise?
Why point out the faults of Adams or Vantocley's foolish ways?
Why not dwell sometimes on subjects of a cheerful, hopeful kind?
Why keep hunting for the troubles those who search may always find?

Why go knocking, knocking, knocking, when you often, if you would,
Might discover fair excuses to be saying something good?

Don't you know that other people soon or late must think that you,
If you see no good in others, lack the mainly virtues too?

Why refer to others always in a sneering, snappish way?
Why not be discreetly silent if there's nothing good to say?

—Chicago Record-Herald.

Taking Advantage of the Truce.

He—Well, my dear, if we have to play bridge together, let us promise not to say an unkind word about each other's play.

She—Very well. Then I'll declare a no trumper as often as I please.

Whereupon the husband faintly groans and turns away.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

GOLF EXCELLENCE IN FAMILIES.

Mother and Four Daughters do Good Work in Irish Championship.

The tendency of members of one family to excel in some particular sport was unusually well illustrated in the women's golf championship of Ireland, which has just been finished on the Portrush links in Ireland, says the New York Times. Over 50 women entered, including most of the leading players in the United Kingdom. The features, however, were the presence in the tournament of five members of the Hazlet family, Mrs. Hazlet and her four daughters, whose admirable golf has won admiration in more than one championship match.

Miss May Hazlet was the holder of the title, an honor she had won in three previous years. In the preliminary medal play round she led the field with a score of 86, her sister, Miss Florence Hazlet, coming second with 87, while another sister, Miss Violet Hazlet, tied for fourth place. Mrs. and Miss Hazlet were defeated in the second match play round, but the three leading sisters survived for the semifinal round, when Miss Florence Hazlet beat Miss Violet Hazlet by one hole, and Miss May Hazlet won her match. The final therefore brought Miss May and Miss Florence Hazlet together, and the former won the right to the Irish championship for the coming year, making her fifth victory for the title, by defeating her sister by 5 up and 4 to play. Mrs. Cutnell, who, previous to her marriage was Miss Rhona Affair, the former English champion, and who visited this country three years ago, was among the players, but she was defeated in the fourth round. The Hazlet family stands unique for the number of women golfers that it can furnish for notable competitions. In this country the most marked example is that of the Curtis sisters, Miss Margaret and Miss Harriet Curtis of Boston. In the American women's championship last year they both survived to the final round, when Miss Margaret Curtis defeated her sister for the national title by 4 up and 6 to play.
